

Orwell initially intended to set his work in the year 1980. However, due to his pulmonary Tuberculosis delaying the writing process, he changed the date to 1982 and then finally to 1984. The meaning behind the title of the book is subject to various interpretations. One popular theory suggests that Orwell simply switched the last two digits of the year in which he wrote the book.

